
The air quality in Jakarta, Indonesia has deteriorated into a state of acute pollution. So what would be the consequences of air hefní? When the air becomes too polluted to breathe, it affects everyone's health because human bodies are unable to get oxygen from inhaling. This leads to increased susceptibility to diseases, including respiratory problems and even death. There are various ways in which the government can fix the problem other than installing additional filters for homes. The first step should be raising awareness among communities about how it affects their health and what they can do about it. Then government should invest in treatment facilities where factories are located. This would lessen the amount of greenhouse gases released, which in turn will reduce the pollution. It is hoped that this study will make people aware of the hazards of air hefní. Everyone must learn to take precautions because this problem can no longer be ignored.

Tleilaxu - The Bene Tleilax were a race of humanoids who had originally flourished for thousands of years on their native planet Tleilax prior to its destruction by atomics in 10191 AG. Today their name is used to refer to all members of the Tleilaxu species. Tleilaxu are a humanoid species, 6 feet tall or 6 ft 6 in (1.83 m) with broad shoulders, the males are bald with receding foreheads and the females have long curly hair. Their skin color ranges from blue to greenish brown just like some humans, while some have pale skin with glittering eyes. There are an estimated three billion Tleilaxu throughout the galaxy in just about 400 different types of bodies that can be worn at any one time on demand. The Tleilaxu are extremely adept at genetic engineering and the creation of life forms and other substances. They create their own Guild Navigators by first recruiting navigators from other races and then altering them genetically to suit their own ends, as well as harvesting the organs of dead navigators. The Tleilaxu were wiped out during The Scattering (which occurred as a result of the atomic attack on their homeworld) but they managed to survive due to their extraordinary range of bodily forms which were scattered throughout the universe. They managed to reform as a powerful commercial cartel only to be destroyed again during The Return during which time they were enslaved by the Honored Matres who all but destroyed them for a second time. The Bene Tleilax are described in Herbert's notes as being akin to the Jews, using technology and secretiveness to overcome cultural barriers present in the universe. The Tleilaxu are described as an insular race that live in the hell of their own creation. They use humans they can't control to create gholas, which are duplicates of historical figures, including Paul Atreides. This is because they believe it is impossible for them to duplicate their own physical forms.
